Statutes form the second category of primary legal sources; in fact, statutory law is central to many legal issues and should often be the starting point for much of your research. This quick reference guide will help you understand the legislative process and how to use Westlaw resources to retrieve relevant statutory provisions.

What Is a Statute?
The word statute refers to a law passed by a state legislature or the U.S. Congress that commands, prohibits, or declares something. It is sometimes called legislation.

It is easy to overlook the importance of statutes in law school because most law school discussion focuses on case law. Yet state and federal court cases often involve statutory interpretation, and enactment of a statute may reverse established case law.

The tools and techniques used to research statutes can also be used to research federal and state constitutions, treaties, administrative rules, executive orders, uniform laws, local charters and ordinances, and court rules.

Where Do I Find Statutes?
FEDERAL STATUTES IN PRINT
After the U.S. Congress passes a bill and the president signs it into law, it is typically codified, i.e., placed into the United States Code (USC), the official version of federal statutory law. The USC includes 50 subject titles, which are subdivided into chapters and sections. The USC contains the codified legislation, as well as such elements as authority references, historical notes, enactment dates, cross-references, tables, and an index.

Since 1927, West has published an annotated version of the USC, the United States Code Annotated® (USCA®). Annotations are summaries of published court decisions that have interpreted the section. In the USCA, the annotations follow the text of the section. The USCA and its indexes are updated more frequently than the USC—pocket part inserts and interim pamphlets are issued throughout the year.

STATE STATUTES IN PRINT

Like federal laws, laws passed by the legislatures of the 50 states and U.S. territories, e.g., Puerto Rico, are available in unannotated form. The laws are first published chronologically as session laws and then codified into the state legislative codes.

West publishes annotated codes for 48 states and the District of Columbia. Like the USCA, West annotated state statutes include cross-references to other state and federal statutes and administrative rules. They also provide historical notes; pertinent West topics and key numbers; references to law review and American Jurisprudence 2nd (Am Jur® 2d) articles; and summaries of court decisions, including those of the U.S. Supreme Court. West annotated state statutes are updated annually with pocket part inserts.

STATUTES ON WESTLAW

On Westlaw you can retrieve the USCA, as well as annotated and unannotated statutes from all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Guam, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. In addition, Westlaw gives you access to session laws, proposed bills, and legislative history.

Retrieving Statutes in Print

Since your issue may be governed by state law, federal law, or both, you will probably want to look for both federal and state statutes. Look in the index volumes of the USCA for references to statutes potentially relevant to your issue. Read each statutory provision—both in the main volume and in the supplement—and make a note of potentially valuable cross-references, law review citations, Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) references, and case citations. Follow these leads. Then check the annotated code of your state, e.g., West’s Revised Code of Washington Annotated, for references to statutes potentially relevant to your issue.

Retrieving Statutes on Westlaw

There are several methods for retrieving relevant statutes on Westlaw. The method you choose depends on what you know about the statute.

RETRIEVING A STATUTE BY CITATION

If you know the citation of a statute (typically consisting of the title number, the abbreviated name of the code, and the section number, e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. § 3105), type the citation in the Find by citation text box in the left frame of the tabbed Law School page and click Go to retrieve the section. If you are unsure of the correct citation format for a state statute, type xx st (where xx is a state’s two-letter postal abbreviation, e.g., ca st for California statutes) in the text box to display an easy-to-use Find template.

USING THE SEARCH PAGE

Access the USCA or a state statutes database. The Search page is displayed. The USCA Search page (Figure 2) provides links to features such as a table of contents, an alphabetical index, and the Popular Name Table, which you can use to find a statute by its short title or common name.

- Click Table of Contents to display the table of contents for the USCA.
- Click Statutes Index to browse for relevant statutory sections.
- Click Pop. Name Table to browse an alphabetical list for the name of an act and to see all statutory sections under which the act was codified.

You can also begin your research by typing a Terms and Connectors query or a Natural Language description in the Search text box and clicking Search Westlaw.

USING THE TABLE OF CONTENTS SERVICE

The Table of Contents service allows you to browse the table of contents for a set of statutes, view a document in the context of the sections surrounding it, and quickly retrieve related sections. Browse the table of contents by clicking the plus (+) and minus (−) symbols. You can also select the check box next to a title, chapter, part, or subpart and click Expand Selections at the bottom of the page. That portion of the table of contents will be expanded. To retrieve a specific section, click its hypertext link.

USING THE STATUTES INDEX

Use the alphabetical statutes index to retrieve sections on a specific topic. Click the hypertext links and the plus and minus symbols until you see a section that interests you. To view the full text of the section, click its citation. You can also search an index for specific terms by using the Search feature.
BROWSING CONSECUTIVE SECTIONS

When you are viewing a statute, click Previous Section or Next Section at the top of the document to view consecutive sections even if they were not retrieved by your search or Find request. For example, if you retrieve 29 U.S.C.A. § 2614, click Previous Section at the top of the document to view section 2613 or Next Section to view section 2615.

To return to the document you originally retrieved, click Original Results at the top of the Links tab or the Result List tab.

KEYCITE STATUS FLAGS

A red flag indicates that the statute has been amended by a recent session law, repealed, superseded, or held unconstitutional or preempted in whole or in part.

A yellow flag indicates that the statute has been renumbered or transferred by a recent session law; that an uncodified session law or proposed legislation affecting the statute is available (statutes merely referenced, i.e., mentioned, are not marked with a yellow flag); that the statute was limited on constitutional or preemption grounds or its validity was otherwise called into doubt; or that a prior version of the statute received negative treatment from a court.

A green C indicates that the statute has citing references.

HISTORY OF A STATUTE

Click History on the Links tab to view the history of a displayed statute. Statute history includes citations to cases affecting the validity of the statute, recent session laws that amend or repeal the statute (also called legislative action or updating documents), proposed legislation, bill drafts, reports and related materials, credits, and historical and statutory notes.
